New Weapons Strengthen Anti-Tank Defences

Post Military Correspondent

ONLOOKERS at the Independence Day parade in Haifa yesterday were much impressed by the French S.S. 30 guided anti-tank missile and the American 106-millimetre recoilless gun displayed by our artillery and infantry units. These two items of equipment have greatly reinforced the anti-tank defence of the ground forces. They have given anti-tank defences a new mobility, compared to the much more cumbersome conventional anti-tank artillery, and enable enemy armour to be challenged from a greater distance.

The S.S.30 anti-tank missile can knock out any tank up to a distance of 1,500 metres, and the 106-mm. gun is lethal against a moving tank 1,200 metres away. These weapons supplement the tank — long considered the most efficient anti-tank weapon — the conventional gun and the much shorter-range bazooka and anti-tank projectiles in use with the Defence Forces.

During World War II as the calibre and range of the guns mounted on increased, anti-tank artillery also grew bigger and heavier. The development of the guided missile and recoilless gun, carried on women-carriers, cars, jeeps or even on foot, enable them to be brought into action against armour far more quickly than tanks or heavy artillery.

Two out of Three

The S.S.30, a Nord product, first came into use with the French Army in 1953. After achieving notable success, the missile was acquired by the Swedish, Swiss, West German and Israeli armies. The latest to show an interest in the S.S.30 has been the U.S. Army. Israeli artillery officers claim that their gunners can score direct hits with one out of three of the guided missiles.

under battle conditions; that is, they can knock out two tanks with every three S.S.30s fired.

The S.S.30, which carries a hollow charge head, penetrates up to 200 mm. of steel, enough to pierce any tank of today out of action. The S.S.30 has 200 mm. of armour.

One of the most important and revolutionary advantages of the S.S.30 is that it can be operated from behind cover. This enables its gunners to fire the missile out of a ditch or from a trench. The missile can be fired from a distance of 1,500 metres or more.

The S.S.30 is 30 cm. long and weighs 15 kilograms. It weighs 45 lbs. It has four wings and flies 30 metres up to 200 mm. of steel. It is a flying missile. It is guided by a radio beam from the launcher. It requires less weight, fine coordination, and judgment and the ability to make quick decisions as he directs it forward to the left or right via a thin cable. A disadvantage is that the S.S.30 is effective only from a distance of 1,500 metres or more from where it was fired.

Some armies also employ the S.S.30 from the air, mainly with helicopters. Missiles launched from the air have been set up on command cars and jeeps, enabling them to change positions in accordance with the movement of enemy armour.

The 106-mm. American recoilless gun looks like a 2.40-metre-long draisine carried on a jeep. It weighs 114 kilograms and fires hollow charge shells which penetrate up to 500 mm. steel or twice that thickness of solid concrete. An operating crew of four men fires up to five shells per minute. The gun can follow a moving target nearly 90 degrees and can be taken by helicopter hoist.

The gun weighs 1,000 lbs. from its rear to a distance of 20 metres. It can be disassembled in 10 minutes.

Herzl's vision of the Jewish state, which he saw as a young nation built on the ruins of the old, is a vision of a new people of Israel have in it.

MALEA RABINOWITZ

FRIDAY'S PRESS

Meditations on Herzl

It was a strange quirk of fate, writes Omer (Hizdri), that it was precisely from emancipated and assimilated Diaspora Jews, not from the narrow alleyways of the Jewish ghetto and the teeming Jewish masses in Eastern Europe, that the proclaimer of the Jewish State emerged. Herzl envisaged a model state, but political Zionism alone was not enough to bring the vision to life. An additional element was required, pioneering socialism, and that was provided by those who followed Herzl after the abortive 1905 Russian Revolution.

Herzl's (National Religious) adds that it was all to the good that it was Herzl, who was an un-Jewish Jew, who was who was chosen by Providence to unfurl the banner of the Jewish revival. Had it been left, his example to an Eastern European Jew, he would have been a Jewish Jew.

MARGINAL COMMENT MT. EVEREST STAYS PUT

By George Leonof

MR. Chou En-lai should have known his Chinese, even in Shanghai 20 years ago. Lao Liu was an authority on immovable property.

FOR all his studied composure, Mr. Chou must have sensed his little hours at the unimpeachable welcome prepared for him in Katmandu last week. The Nepalese capital had obviously given careful thought as to the most appropriate manner in which to greet the Chinese Prime Minister. It wished to comply with all the rich traditions of Asian hospitality and the provisions of protocol such as both a state dignitary of a powerful, friendly neighbouring state — and one, moreover, whose the Nepalese Premier had recently returned after reaching a frontier agreement. On the other hand, there was no less need to reflect popular feeling about China's claim to Mount Everest, disclosed by Premier Khrushchev after his return from Peking. The Nepalese hit upon a happy synthesis. As they beautified their capital to receive Mr. Chou, they set up ornate arches, decorated with foliage and flowers, and bearing, as their place of residence, pictures of Mount Everest flying the flag of Nepal.

IT seemed strange. We hadn't suspected Lao Liu of any particular affection for the British flag, other than it had flown there previously. Nor was he any longer particularly inimical against the Japanese; the Sino-Japanese undeclared war had by then been going on for some 30 years, ever since the annexation of Manchuria, and the main force of Lao Liu's anti-Japanese passion had been spent, the routine revealing itself occasionally in a routine string of curses which he put rather more energy than the job seemed to require. He was alternately muttering under his nose and snorting disdainfully, from time to time throwing a contemptuous sidelong glance at the offensive sheet of textile waving vainly from the flagpole.

MOUNT Everest, Chomolungma in the Tibetan name for it, straddles the Nepalese-Tibetan frontier, but its august summit has generally been considered Nepalese territory. The Nepalese peasant, in fact, was one of the only four national banners ever to flutter from the peak. Along with the Union Jack and the Indian and U.S. flags, it was planted there by Sir Edmund Hillary and Tensing Norgay in 1953. The news that Mr. Chou, or some other so-called summiter in Peking, wants to hoist the Chinese standard over it too — cartographically speaking, of course — was not particularly exciting, considering its practical implications. What does one do with a mountain peak? Lao Liu had a theory about such things.

GROSVENOR House was a large, handsome apartment building in what was then the French Concession in Shanghai. It sprang in a gentle arc over a large city block, presiding up to a tower 14 stories high. The estate was British property, owned by the Grosvenor family. After First Harbin, in December 1941, it was taken over by the Japanese, who then occupied the city's international settlement and lost no time getting their hands on valuable enemy property. Our alienated widow faced the Grosvenor tower, and the morning the Japanese hoisted the Rising Sun over the building, we found Lao Liu dully smiling a face with bronze strokes into which he put rather more energy than the job seemed to require. He was alternately muttering under his nose and snorting disdainfully, from time to time throwing a contemptuous sidelong glance at the offensive sheet of textile waving vainly from the flagpole.

The folklore of the Philippines is so diverse that material for Benitez's concert is a problem. Dwelling among the 7,000 islands of the archipelago are 45 ethnographic groups (the Philippines proper has 100 ethnic groups), and their music, Christianity by the Spaniards, who came in 1521 and stayed for close to 400 years.

Lying some 500 miles off the southeast coast of Asia, the Philippines enjoy a warm climate all year round, they have dense tropical forests, the mountains, fertile soil in the plains, about 10,000 species of flowering plants and ferns (including 600 species of orchids) and their marine life is one of the most abundant known.

"Life is easy in the Philippines," says Miss Benitez. "The nature is so beautiful. I wanted my young people to see Israel. It's good for them to see a young nation built on the ruins of the old. We share the young people of Israel have in it."

Meditations on Herzl

It was a strange quirk of fate, writes Omer (Hizdri), that it was precisely from emancipated and assimilated Diaspora Jews, not from the narrow alleyways of the Jewish ghetto and the teeming Jewish masses in Eastern Europe, that the proclaimer of the Jewish State emerged. Herzl envisaged a model state, but political Zionism alone was not enough to bring the vision to life. An additional element was required, pioneering socialism, and that was provided by those who followed Herzl after the abortive 1905 Russian Revolution.

Herzl's (National Religious) adds that it was all to the good that it was Herzl, who was an un-Jewish Jew, who was who was chosen by Providence to unfurl the banner of the Jewish revival. Had it been left, his example to an Eastern European Jew, he would have been a Jewish Jew.
